Timothy the Green

6 0 2

Chapter 1 by Madelyn Mueth

Once upon a time, there was a hut in the forest and living in that particular hut was a young man who went by the name of Timothy the Green. Timothy the Green had hazelnut brown hair and bright green eyes. He was about fifteen years of age. Timothy the Green was always left by himself because he had a contagious disease called cholera but, he loved his garden. When he was gardening, all the pain of being alone and not having a friend melted away.

One day, when Timothy the Green was gardening, he heard a rustling in the bushes. Startled, he spun around and found himself face to face with a young girl, who looked to be about ten years of age. Anxious that he might give his disease to this lovely girl, he said, "Go away! I'm contagious." The young girl, who was not scared to be around Timothy the Green said, "There's no need for me to flee, for I am sick too." Delighted that he had found someone to talk to and garden with, he pleaded with her to stay. She replied, "I don't have any other place to go. I will stay here with you, for at least a little while."
